My mother was in the facility as a reluctant resident eventually after respite. It was better than what we could do as a family by far and she eventually settled and was well looked after. The staff were on the whole very caring. However I think they are pushed to the limit with what seems like a concern by head office to stick to a low budget and make a profit. Nurses doing this job are the biggest asset of this business and they should be looked after much better themselves financially to ensure that as we all grow older there is enough incentive to attract people to do the job. We were lucky with our mum. She was in an aged care facility in a regional area. I have seen facilities in the city which make you depressed just to walk through the door never mind have to put your loved one there or be there yourself.

My mother was very unsettled for the first few weeks in her low care facility. Not only has she a room with a view but it is big, bright and airy. All the staff from the less important to the top are caring and interested and go out of their way to help a grumbling old 91 year old lady feel at home and wanted and comfortable.
